YESTERDAY afternoon an unfortunate fatal accident cooursed at the new Central Market." While walking along Queen's Road, Constable Macdonald saw a Chinaman running down the street, blood flowing from his neck, and another Chinaman in pursuit. The constable, who was in plain clothes, seized the fellow, who was accused of stealing a pair of trousers. He took him into the market to look for the Sikh on duty there, and as he was approaching one of the flights of stairs on the Jubilee Street side of the market, a gang of kicked the man. From inquiries we have made we are certain there is not the slightest enormously. THE PURSUIT OF PLEASURE OR, MUSIC AT THE PEAK. Pleasure is defined as anything that makes life enjoyable. What particular nort of thing is a matter of individual taste. The pursuit of pleasure therefore follows different channels according to differences of constitution.

This Colony is the very place for the pursuit of pleasure. There is more pursuit than pleasure about it. Take, for instance, the rum and gin are in all probability the artistic enjoyment of good music-the purest, noblest, sweetest thing in life. Take a concert at the Peak, like that of to the health of ordinary moderate con- Saturday last, and take an enthusiastic concert-goor from Kowloon. It requires a good deal of enthusiasm to take him (or

He has to scramble through his dinner with one eye on the clock and the other eye on a few time-tables-regular tram times, summer service times, band-night times and specials for this night only; and as far as he can make out through the conflicting misrepresentations of expresses, concert programmes, hotel notices, and newspaper references, he hasn't much time to feed. let alone finding leisure moments to inculcate colority into the Chinese demestics, who seem, of course, to think it is Sunday's breakfast and not Saturday's dinner that though numerous arrests have been made, they are preparing.

Then the devotee of classical concerts in Cloudland, only half stuffed with halfcooked dinner less than half masticated. suddenly remembers that he has yet to dress. Then when that is settled he has 24 minutes left to travel a mile and catch the farry launch. Then when that is caught, by a flying leap at the risk of his of Siam. neck as the launch is moving out, a halfdozen roystering rowdies, belated as usual, A large mass of official correspondence come along to the wharf and in stentorian tones insist on the launch coming back for them. The tide is sure to be strong and perverse, and the launch alowly turns and twists itself into an awful mess among sampans and such small fry, until you 'dunno where you are and at last butta ominously headfirst and sternfirst and sideways against wherves and quays, till the unpunctual passengers tumble on board, any

At last the ferry launch gets away, ten minutes late. That makes all the difference between catching and missing the car for the Peak. It turns out that there is not another car for an hour. To wait or not to wait? It is an hour before the next launch back. So the ardent concertgoer decides to stick to the concert-half a concert is better than no music. Profiting by the lesson fresh in his mind. he determines that nothing shall make him late on the return pilgrimage. He will not wait for ithe last car; it might be overcrowded, and he hates to drive women and children away for the sake of scating himself in their place. Nor will he wait for the special late forry-launch advertised to wait for concert-goers; for the typhoon signal has been hoisted all day, and most of the sampans have taken shelter, and the steam launches may have to do likewise. And in that case he would have to stay on the island over Sunday, in dress clothes, and sacrifice all the magazines he France and a check to British pretensions. had taken home to Kowloon for Sunday
